

ACT

Commencing in 2017, Radford College has partnered with the University of Melbourne as part of the Plans to Pedagogy research program. The overall objective of this research has been to support teachers to effectively use contemporary, innovative learning environments as a pedagogical tool. This online event will bring together Radford's 'spatial learning' group to discuss the activities and findings from the research to date. We will discuss the key spaces that resulted from the research activities and look at how this has impacted future planning for the site.

Together, we will explore the dual perspectives of designers and educators, with a focus on the collaborative process that led to the development of these two very different buildings.
